The slave trade represents a dramatic encounter of history and geography. This four-century-long tragedy has been one of the greatest dehumanizing and senseless events in the history of humanity, as one of the first forms of globalization. The resultant slavery system, an economic and commercial type of venture organization, linked different regions and continents: Europe, Africa, the Indian Ocean, the Caribbean, and the Americas. It was based on an ideology of conceptual structure founded on the contempt for the black man and set up in order to justify the sale of human beings (black Africans) in this case as a mobile asset: For this is how they were regarded in the “black codes”, which constituted the legal framework of slavery.

The history of this dissimulated tragedy, its deeper causes, its modalities and consequences have yet to be written. This is the basic objective that the UNESCO’s member states set for the “Slave Route” Project. The issues at stake are: historical truth, human rights, and development. The idea of “roots” signifies, first and foremost, the identification of “timelessness of humanity”, i.e., circuits followed by triangular trade. In this sense, geography sheds light on history. In fact, the triangular trade map not only lends substance to this early form of globalization, but also, by shoreline the course it took, illuminates the motivations and goals of the slave system.

These slave trade maps are only a “first draft”. Based on currently available historical data about the triangular trade and slavery, they should be completed to the extent that the theme networks of researchers, set up by UNESCO, continue to bring to light the deeper layers of the iceberg by exploiting archives and oral traditions. It will then be possible to understand that the black slave trade forms the invisible stuff of relations between Africa, Europe, the Indian Ocean, the Americas and the Caribbean.

Doudou Diène
Director of the Division of Interultural Dialogue

THE SLAVE ROUTE

DEPORTATION FLOWS, 15th-16th Centuries

17th Century

18th Century

19th Century